Promises To Keep by Kathryn ShayVon Ein KundeKathryn Shay's "Promises To Keep", clinical psychologist and secret serviceagent Joe Stonehouse, becomes part of the special School Threat AssessmentTeam after his niece is shot

by a fellow high-school student. He and his young-looking partner Luke Ludzecky, who acts as Joe's bad-boy-nephew, join Fairholm High School, where Joe is supposed to help as a counselor. Principal Suzanna Quinn is not only not very amused about the hiring of a new staff member without her approval, but is downright annoyed, when she learns that Joe is a secret service agent. Only when she learns, that a student, who committed suicide, had given hints, that acts of violation were planned, she gives in, though she hates to keep everything under cover and so misleading her colleagues and her son. Joe and Suzanna have to add their efforts to prevent a crime. During their teamwork they fall in love with each other. The story is full of suspense and passion. The protagonists and these secondary characters are people with a past they don't want to reveal but have to deal with, a presence that gives them a hard time, but their future is looking bright after all. Ms Shay is a gifted storyteller and as a long-time English teacher she knows what she writes about. Her view is one of an insider: hard, realistic but with compassion and understanding. I'm sure, once you have read this book, you'll want to repeat the experience with another of her books.
